PROFILE: NEWCOMER DEVIN BROWN DEBUTS IN FRONTIERS: THE LIVE EXPERIENCE

Born and raised in southeast San Diego, tyro-thesp DEVIN BROWN was 19-years-old and playing college football when he found himself connecting less with the gridiron and more with the stage and screen.

“Before practice, I would sit in my car eating my oatmeal and watching movies and the behind-the-scenes bloopers and just think ‘I wonder if I could do that?’”

After discussing his changing interests with his coaches and his mother, he left football and bravely tried out for a school production of ROMEO AND JULIET, even though he had nothing prepared and no idea of how an audition worked. But, as fate would have it, the cast was missing an actor and Devin was asked to assume that role in the show.

Since then, he has been pushing himself as an actor in every way he can, through plays and short films and now as “Liam Berringer,” a deserter haunted by war, in FRONTIERS: THE LIVE EXPERIENCE.

While excited to take on the role, Devin could feel from the start both the commitment and opportunity would be substantial. Still, he is undaunted.

“Just knowing this show will be something that will stretch and challenge me as an artist excites me. I’m open and willing to fail, fall down, take risks and be as vulnerable as I can.”
